Lydia: So we finally got our house back! Time to pack up Kitty and go back home, to a car and real internet and a town that doesn't look like everybody evacuated for the end of the world.

About time, right? Oh. Hey Mary! What's up?

Mary: So hey, remember those obnoxious girls I was talking about the other week?

Lydia: Oh, yeah, kind of rings a bell, why?

Mary: I uh, heard that somebody stuck hundreds of unicorn stickers all over their car windows.

Lydia: Unicorn stickers, that's... awful.

Mary: Yeah, apparently there's been a lot of nail breakage in attempts to scrape them off.

Lydia: Totes trag.

Mary: So you wouldn't know anything about that, right?

Lydia: Me? Pfft ha, no! That's like, so immature. How'd you find out about that anyway?

Mary: Actually, Eddie texted me.

Lydia: Whaaat!

Mary: Yeah, apparently you're right, "everyone loves a good gif."

Lydia: Holla!

Mary: Well, your dad's waiting downstairs. I'll see you there, okay?

Lydia: Okay.

Mary: You're not so bad, Lydia.

Lydia: Thanks, you're not so boring.

Mary: Thanks.

Lydia: Hugsies!

So, everyone, it's been real, but it's time to get back to reality. And that's okay, because one day, Jane will be off and married, hopefully to Bing, and hopefully Lizzie will end her perpetual singledom. So you just gotta enjoy what you got while you got it. And don't forget to make time to par-tay. And remember, nobody brings the party like the what? Ly-dee-yaaah.
