Lydia: Happy Thanksgiving everyone! Jk. Thanksgiving's like the worst most pointless boring holiday ever. You don't get presents, you don't get candy, you don't get to dress up in cool, crazy, funny, sexy costumes- well, I guess you could but that would be totes awkward universe. Oh, hey Jane.

Jane: Hi! Are you telling everybody what you're thankful for?

Lydia: No, cause that's totally lame.

Jane: No, it's Thanksgiving! C'mon.

Lydia: So, you don't seem to be dressed up as a turkey or an Amish person.

Jane: I don't think that's...

Lydia: Besides, I'm sure we'll get enough of that at dinner, if Mom ever stops interrogating you and Lizzie about every tiny detail of your super exciting lives while you were away.

Jane: I think Mom's having a hard time realizing that her daughters are growing up and moving on with their lives.

Lydia: Moving on? I know you live in L.A. now but you're not moving on from us.

Jane: No, of course not! No, I just think she hasn't thought about it and now she has to.

Lydia: Well, Lizzie's not really gone. That was just a vacation, and Mom always has me!

Jane: Yes she does! And she's very lucky. Ooh, or thankful, if you will.

Lydia: Well yeah, who wouldn't be thankful for me? I'm supermegafoxyawesomehot!

Jane: I don't think that's why Mom and Dad are thankful for you, but sure, yes, okay. [laughs] So dinner's almost ready, finish up and go help Mom, okay?

Lydia: Okay.

Jane: Okay. Happy Thanksgiving!

Lydia: I guess I'm thankful that my sisters are back for Thanksgiving. I mean, it's super weird when they're not here, and that seems to be happening a lot lately. BUT, who wants to mope about that? I have some turkey to eat, some alcohol to sneak past Mom, and some Lizzie Bennet videos to crash, because Lizzie's back, Jane's back, Mary's not back but she will be and I have not forgotten about her and Kitty's around here somewhere. And I have to give them all something to be thankful for, right? ME! Yolo, bitches. Lydia, out!
