Maria: (off-screen) How long have you been working at Collins and Collins?

Charlotte: I was recruited as a partner at Collins and Collins less than a month ago. Uh, since then--

Maria: (off-screen) Hang on. Can you say that again? But not repeat "Collins and Collins"?

Charlotte: You actually want your subject repeat your question in the answer. That way you can edit out their questions later.

Maria: (off-screen) Okay... uh, but you weren't looking at the camera.

Charlotte: You only want to look into the lens if your intention is to directly address the audience. That's effective, but it can feel intrusive if you overdo it. Come around here. Try it out... see?

Maria: Why do you always do that?

Charlotte: I want you to do your best work.

Maria: No, I mean, why do you always not like to be by yourself on camera?

Charlotte: I'm on camera plenty. Didn't you watch Lizzie's videos?

Maria: Yeah, when she dragged you in. You're good on camera. People like you.

Charlotte: Thanks, but... it's just, not my thing.

Maria: You're sure?

Charlotte: What else would it be?

Maria: I was worried it was about... prior bad experiences?

Charlotte: Huh?

Maria: You know that time when we, uh, did that--

Charlotte: Oh, n-n-n-n-no, that has nothing to do with it.

Maria: Oh. Good! Should we get back to the interview?

Charlotte: Yes!

Maria: Okay.

Maria: (off-screen) On your action.

Charlotte: I started here as a partner at Collins and Collins, uh, less than a month ago. Since then, I've spearheaded several initiatives, um, within the company...
